SUNDAY......SEPT. 5, 1858. IT The debate in Illinois, between Lincoln and Douglas, is the ablest and the most important that has ever taken place in any of the and miscellaneous-together with everything States, on the great question which has so long agitated the country, elected and defeated Preideutial candidates, built up and broken down parties. It is the opening of the question for 1860. There the real battle has begun, by roadsides, too, from the heaviest artillery longlas is matchless in debate, and stands upon the only national platform. Lincoln is able, and does full justice to the bad cause he advocates. He is the champion of anti-slavery in the North. It is the one idea that has lessly, and thus defeat his own purpose. But he enters the Senate of the United States, should be he surcessful, to assail the institugenuity can devise a way to do so constitutionally and legally. Ilis movements are to be under the cover of forms and technicalities. he accomplishment of his ends, until he is sat isfied that slavery is in the process of final exinction. This he avows, and declares that this Inion cannot exist, composed partly of free and partly of slave States. His party bave wisely selected him to cast their programme, and defend and recommend it. Happily, national men have, in his antagonist, one who has surveyed the whole ground, and who is matchless in debate. Men of reflection will read this discussion with intense interest. The result of the canvass is of the last importance. If Douglas should be defeated, it will be a liemocratic defeat—a defeat of national doctrines, on which alone this Union can rest. It would be less matter if the consequences stopped in the State of Illinois; but the politician knows the ircumstances whileh connect this cauvass in llinois with the election in other states. The shole North will be affected by the result, for good or evil. It will be easily seen that the inccess of Lincoln will show that the majority of the people of Illinois sauction a war of extermination upon slavery, and intend to embrace all the opportunities to exert all the power of the federal government for its extermination. If this shall be the end, in spite of uch a champion as Douglas in his own State, what hopes can be entertained of other States ?

A writer in the Charleston Courier objects to ending the slaves back to Africa, argues that they may be sold into slavery, and says one man in that city has offered $50,000 in each for one hundred of them. The Evening News of that city, however takes bold ground in favor of their return, and says there is no other course under the law, for the United States officials to pursie. It adds that "they cannot be permit ted to be enslaved, nor would it be either politic or proper that they should be turned loose in the United States as freemen."

Miss Hodson's Manrico was the best character she has yet given us, dramatically considered, while her vocalization was generally good. This was especially the case in the aria, tower scene. In the scenes with Azucena, doubtless is by this time. Miss Hodson sang in a pleasing manner, but not with that abandon, if we may use the word in this connection, which characterized her performance in the Miserere and chorus. In the canzone, "Upwards the Flames Roll," her voice was a little shaky: not exactly tremulous, then take the beuch. but pervous: not more so, however, than one would expect in a person of the Gipsy's age. Miss Kiug's principal fault is constitutional, and can scarcely be corrected; it is that of too much nervousness. For this, her clear and distinct enunciation makes much atonement. In the scena and raconto, "In fetters they laid AT A gentleman was yesterday robbed of her," this nervousness was very appropriate, the eighty-five dollars at the National Hotel. PARTMENT.-We were gratified in passing Unicraity Square, a few days since, to remark the mproved aspect of the Medical College edifice and grounds. In their new dress and shape they present a really attractive appearance; and we are assured, by competent judges, that the internal arrangements are fully equal to the exterior of the fine edifice. In truth, we suppose, few colleges of medicine anywhere are more amply provided with all the apparatus and materials for medical teaching than the University of Louisville. Students of medicine hardly act wisely, we should think, who pass by it to distant medical schools without stopping to examine its great resources. It is one of the ity. For the Louisville Democrat. LINES TO OIGA, OF GLEN ROSA.

My cleanning young friend, Your attention please lend, Whils I tell you a piece of my mind Concerning yourself Converging yourself
The most mischievous elf
hat e er played the deuce with mankind,

The rosy Aurora,
it the flower queen, Flora,
is not halt so bright nor so pretty;
so Ariol in air
With you can compare—
With you can compare—
With you halt so brilliant nor witty.

Your cheeks are so blooming, If a bee saw you coming, If d he sure to take each for a rose; that on one or the other,

To alight would so bother The thing, he'd come pop on your nose Your sweet little lip
The amilrosia might sip,
M) this golds are so given to quading;
And when wreathed with a smile.
It a saint would legnile,
And put Zeno in favor of langthing.

Your fine, penciled brow, is as white as the snow-Your volce like the sweet harp, Holian; And In manness and mien. You surpost Josephine, Who won the proud heart of Napoleon.

Your eye is so bright, It adds lustre to light, intshining the gems of the welkin; And under its lil Lurks Cupid ha f hid, Watching out for his prey like Grimalkin.

if the whole human family you are the epitone. With the familio of the bad all amended; You is the Protein title, For, sweet titles, in you all their genius and virtues are blended, G. MICL, KY., September, 18'5.

THE BETRAYED TO HER BETRAYER.

you told me that you loved me,
And I, near, simple thing,
Seleved the honered, flattering words,
An wist not of their sting;
knew not that your heart was false,
And tall of helibh at,
And that you merely aported with
The affections of my heart.

The effections of my need me,
And it filled my coul write price,
For you clid nice, its weet tones of live,
That I should be your bride;
That I should be your bride;
Transition my heart was sed and lone,
And when I sighed for rest,
Its weary head should pillowed be
I pon your manly breast.

You told me that you loved me,
(in a lovely summer day.
When we were wandering in the wood,
And by the blossoms gay;
There first I owned my heart was yours,
And yielded to my tate,
And dreamed not that you could be false,
I night was too late.

But now you're wandered from my side,
And sought another shrine,
A which to breathe the same false vows—
I now vows that est were mine—
When first you wan my virgin heart,
And promised yours to me,
With my brembling hand enclasped in yours,
E neath the trysting tree.

Is a count the reprinted teet.

And praised my queenly brown,
And you told me that my lips were sweet,
And brighter than the rose,
You told me that my radient eyes
Woodd warm a heart of stone
That my sunne smile had won your heart.
And it was all my own.

And it was all my own.

But now my smile has lost fis light:
These cheeks are pale and wan:
The are the search of the search that then,
and all their laster gone.
I wan shall join the seraph band,
and find the rest denied me hereFarewell, false man, farewell! LATER, SKELLE Co., Kt.
